Advice:	I introduced myself giving both my name and the name of the firm. Then I explained that advice at the police station is free of charge and wholly independent of the police. I checked whether the correct firm had been instructed. Pointing out that police telephone lines are not wholly secure I explained that we should not discuss anything confidential. I went on to explain that we would be able to talk in private at the police station when we attend. I also warned the client not to discuss the case with the police prior to our attendance or sign any papers. Checking the client's welfare I asked about vulnerabilities, medical, drug, alcohol, dependency and childcare issues. Further more I explained that the client was entitled to a copy of the Codes of Practice as well as the right to have someone informed of the detention in custody. I went on to explain any delays and to counter any attempts by the police to dissuade the client taking legal advice. I explained that our attendance would not delay the client's interview or release from custody. Finally, I explained how to contact us and that we are available at all times of the day and night and the client has the right to do so. I gave the client plenty of opportunity to ask questions.
